Elevate the Customer Experience and Increase Program Performance

The Maximus Child Support Mobile App

Today's younger parents grew up with technology. From online banking to ordering dinner, buying clothes, and even purchasing a car with a few taps of their smartphone, Millennials and Generation Z not only prefer to communicate using the latest technology, they expect it. For these tech savvy generations, the customer experience is all important – and it certainly doesn't include phone calls or in-person visits if they can be avoided.

The Maximus Child Support Mobile App can help elevate your agency's program to a whole new level of customer service, meeting the expectations of today's parents while increasing program performance. Parents benefit from a convenient option that's available 24/7 and provides a contact-free, virtual experience. And caseworkers benefit as parents utilize the app for status-checks and routine questions, decreasing overall call volume and enabling staff to focus on more challenging conversations with parents. It's the technology you need to ensure your customers are at the center of your service-delivery model.

In Illinois, overall call volumes are decreasing while app views are on the rise, demonstrating parents' preference for convenient technology that gives them the information they need quickly and easily.

HOW IT WORKS

The app launches for the first time with a request for the parent to register. The registration process establishes the flow of information between the child support office and the parent, and ensures that the information shared is both unique to the parent's case and secure. Once registered, the parent is redirected to the home screen, where they can choose from among six menu options containing information on topics most commonly requested. States can choose to implement all six options, or just those that make the most sense for their programs.
